Final Project Proposal

For my final project, I plan to improve my midterm project, which was based on Puerto Rico. My goal for this project is to add a blog aspect to my website rather than an information-based one. The first page will be about holiday traditions and food. On this page, I will use the same CSS animation I used for my midterm project with new content. For my JavaScript interaction, I will add a frog you can drag little hats on or different clothes. For Jquery, I would like to use a slide toggle to display fun facts about the frogs on the island, as it's one of the main parts of the land and culture.

For my second page, I would like to update the page about the Puerto Rican artists and make the layout less cluttered, as for the third page, I am planning on making it an animation page. I will display my old CSS animation on this page alongside new animations, such as perhaps updating the navigation bar or having the title letters bounce. This time around, I plan to use the flex display to organize my images and text better.

As for fonts, I plan on using the same fonts I used for the midterm, which are Lexend and Englebert, the same two I used for the midterm, for color I would like to keep the same colors (red, blue, and white) but make them gradient. As for other interactions, I would like to try to have images or buttons on the navigation bar hover when the mouse is in contact with them, or specific ideas I have for the artist page. I would like to make it so that when the mouse clicks on the picture, it enlarges when you interact with it, so that the focus is strayed away from the other artists at that moment.
